IN THIS ISSUE

SELECT

183 Virus-Host Interactions

PREVIEWS

187 Glioma Development:
Where Did It All Go Wrong?

K. Sukhdeo, D. Hambardzumyan, and J.N. Rich

189 Tethered Genes Get
Checked during Replication

J. Lukas and J. Bartek

191 Nuclear Pore Structure:
Warming up the Core

A. Harel and Y. Gruenbaum

REVIEW

194 Genetics of Sleep and Sleep Disorders

A. Sehgal and E. Mignot

SNAPSHOT

334 Hair Follicle Stem Cells

W.-M. Woo and A.E. Oro

On the cover: There are numerous connections between macroautophagy and human health and disease. Macroautophagy involves sequestration of cargo within vesicles, termed autophagosomes, for subsequent delivery to the lysosome or vacuole for degradation and recycling. In this issue, Nair et al. (pp. 290–302) demonstrate roles for SNARE proteins in autophagosome formation. The cover image shows the Atg9-containing tubulovesicular cluster (center) that provides membrane to the precursor of the autophagosome, the phagophore (bottom). Original painting by David S. Goodsell based on the scientific design of Daniel J. Klionsky.
