

| F E A T U R E S |

Ancient Stone Tools Force Rethinking of Human Origins

By Kate Wong

Have Aliens Built Huge Structures around Boyajian's Star?

By Kimberly Cartier and Jason T. Wright

Losing Key DNA Made Us Modern Humans

By Philip L. Reno

Can India Save the Warming Planet?

By Varun Sivaram

Schizophrenia's Unyielding Mysteries

By Michael Balter

World's Fastest Movies Capture Molecules in Motion

By Petra Fromme and John C. H. Spence

Wild Foxes Can Be Transformed into Pets in a Few Generations

By Lyudmila Trut and Lee Alan Dugatkin

The Movies, 1917 [Slide Show]

By Dan Schlenoff

| DEPARTMENTS |

FROM THE EDITOR

Humans and Technology: From Reshaping Stone to Reshaping Our World

LETTERS

Readers Respond to the January 2017 Issue

ADVANCES

Detection of Ghostly Particles Could Unmask Illicit Nuclear Weapons

Dissent with Modification: Soothing Evolution–Religion Tensions in the Classroom

Portable Laser Range Finder Enables Real-Time 3-D Mapping

Bird Nests Used to Look More Like Fortresses

Disabled Hands Successfully Replaced with Bionic Prosthetics

New Landslide Forecasts Could Save Lives

Your Brain Remembers Languages You Think You Forgot

In Case You Missed It

This Adorable Mammal Inspired a More Agile Robot

This Advance Brings Us a Lot Closer to a "Hydrogen Economy"

Origins of Male Domination May Lie in Food

FORUM

The Administration's War on Facts Is a War on Democracy Itself

THE SCIENCE OF HEALTH

Aspirin May Prevent Cancer from Spreading, New Research Shows

THE SCIENCE AGENDA

To Change Politics, Do More Than March for Science

TECHNOFILES

Batteries Have Gotten Better, but There's Still Room for Improvement

RECOMMENDED

Daring Apollo 8 Astronauts, Rediscovering a Forgotten Math Genius and Other New Science Books

SKEPTIC

We've Known for 400 Years That Torture Doesn't Work

ANTI GRAVITY

The Federal Government Makes It Ridiculously Hard to Study Gun Violence and Medical Marijuana

50, 100 & 150 YEARS AGO

The Art and Science of Making Movies Moves to the Outdoors, 1917

GRAPHIC SCIENCE

The Northwest Passage Remains Treacherous, Despite Ice Retreat